Black metal traditionally evokes the purity of Nordic arctic forests. It suggests evil, but finds solace in a peaceful icy universe.

“Thirst” was recorded in the punishing heat of the urban hell that is Athens, GR in July.

It’s about the futility of man vs inferno. There’s no escape, only torture and despair.

That’s why the project is rooted in themes of the desert (the gruelling, not the romantic kind) and the hateful scorn that comes from sustained exposure to betrayal and agony.

The recording and mixing were traditional, but mastering was on old, broken tape, to enhance the feeling of hopelessness and total destruction of the spirit.

Maljinn may or may not be associated with dungeon synth act Amn.
